

Child's Hand

Unborn Baby's Hand

Adult's Hand

Gorilla's Hand

Your first reaction was right.
The first 3 pictures are of people's hands.

However, once you realized that the 2nd picture was of an unborn human's hand did you force yourself to deny your instincts to align with, what you believe, a politically correct opinion? Did you backtrack to argue that the 2nd picture was not the hand of a person but rather a mere "growing human without personhood?"

Those in favor of abortion say that the developing unborn human is not a person with protected rights.

What makes you a person and not the unborn?

Are we persons based on our functional abilities? Adult gorillas have more functional abilities than toddler humans. Does that mean gorillas are persons? Does that make the toddler less a person or not a person?

Are we persons simply because our parents chose not to abort us? What about the young girl who survives an abortion? Her mother chose to abort her, yet she lived. Is she less of a person than you?

Or are we persons because the law says we are? Jews in Nazi Germany and African-American slaves were considered less a person than whites. Tomorrow, if the U.S. Supreme Court rules that Americans with a specific heritage have fewer personhood rights than others, would your view change? Would you take a stand because you know that all human beings are inherently persons?

The unborn humans cannot stand up for themselves, but we can stand for them. And we will continue to do so until all recognize their inherent personhood.
